Headline:
Rather cloudy, but mostly dry Tuesday. Mild.

Today:
A rather cloudy start, with just the odd spot of drizzle, mainly along southeastern coasts, but most parts dry. Cloud breaking from the northwest with some occasional brighter or sunny spells by the afternoon. Mild. Maximum temperature 15 deg C (59 deg F).

Tonight:
Cloud thickening overnight, especially northwest, with the odd spot of rain possible. A few clear spells persisting however, with the odd patch of fog possible by dawn, mainly Kent. Minimum temperature 6 deg C (43 deg F).

Wednesday:
Early brightness will be limited as cloud continues to thicken from the northwest through the morning. Outbreaks of light rain and drizzle then possible, although some parts staying dry. Mild. Maximum temperature 15 deg C (59 deg F).

Outlook for Thursday to Saturday:
Cloudy Thursday with only limited brighter spells, but mostly dry. Early brighter spells Friday, before cloud thickens later, but likely staying dry. Brighter spells again Saturday, with isolated showers possible.
